Telestrations

Number of players: 8 people

Time: 60 minutes

How to play: Each player gets a card with a secret word and draw something to represent the word on their sketch book. Then they pass their book to the player on the left and they need to guess what is drawn on the book they receive. This process rotates for several rounds. When everyone gets back their own book, they can see how things change created by miscommunication.

Why it's fun: You and your family and friends can't help laughing when you compare how the last picture can be different from the original one.

How it's good for your brain: This game is a great boost of your creativity as you need to make use of your imagination power to describe some difficult and vague words shown on the cards and guess what others are drawing

Dohdles! What is that?!

Number of players: 3-6 people

How to play: Players sculpt the shape of an object or a living thing with the modeling clay and need to guess what the Dohdles other players make represent.

Why it's fun: It's interesting to see how the imagination of you and your loved ones are demonstrated through their "masterpieces"!

How it's good for your brain: This game is good exercise of your imagination.

Ticket to Ride

Number of players: 2-5 people

Time: 30-60 minutes

How to play: Players need to collect train car cards to claim railway routes across the map. The longer the routes, the more points they earn. Additional points come from fulfilling destination tickets that connect distant cities. There are a variety of editions now out, each mapping a different country, continent or area of the world. My favorites are the original USA and Märklin maps, respectively.

Why it's fun: The rules the game is not complicated so you can play it with your family and friends of all ages. Also, it's an exciting game as you have to act quickly so that you can occupy the ideal routes on the map!

How it's good for your brain: It's a game that can train up player's strategic and logical thinking skills. Also, some of the maps are historical so you can build upon your knowledge of geography in the past and present days by playing the game.
